Political News From Trigg and Lyon—

TRIGG ALL RIGHT.

Chairman Jno. J. Gaines, of the Trigg county Democratic Committee, was in town yesterday and is confident of a sweeping Democratic victory in his county.

Said he: "We have the most thorough organization ever effected in the county and will get out men
this time who have not voted for five years. Our poll of the county shows no defections worth speaking of. I do not know of a single Democrat
who will scratch the ticket."

What majority do you expect?
"We will send Hardin out of the county with 350 majority and Linn with at least 450. Many of the Populists will vote for Hardin and all of them will support Linn."

Goldbugs!
"Oh yes, I'm accused of being one myself, but then Trigg county Democrats don't know how to scratch. We take ours straight."

CREIGHT COURT COLLINGS.

The first three days of the week were taken up with the trial of the Kline case, an account of which appears elsewhere. Deputy Sheriff E.
P. Wilkins left for Eddyville Wednesday night with Kline, to begin his life sentence yesterday. Richard Caldwell, col., convicted of malicious cutting, was also sentenced Wednesday night to one year in the pen, and was taken along with Kline.

Eugene Trice, col., indicted for horse stealing, was found "not guilty."
Wilson Reed, col., was given 30 days in the work house on a charge of petit larceny.

On an indictment for malicious
shooting Will Hughes, col., got 6 months in the work house.
John Crowder, Dave O'Neal and Charles Gruffy, were yesterday convicted of highway robbery and sentenced to the penitentiary for two years. They held up Ester Gupron, near Oak Grove, July last, and robbed him of considerable sum of money. The parties are all colored.

Several other prisoners will be tried this week.

QUARTERLY COURT MATTERS.

Quarterly court has been in session
all of this week, Judge Breathitt presiding. About eighty minor cases have been passed upon, but nearly all of the cases, where there will be much litigation, have been left open for a hearing later on. Court will remain in session until the adjournment of Circuit Court, which holds on throughout the first week of November.

TOBACCO MARKET STEADY.

Our market this week was steady,
with light offerings and small sales.
The receipts were likewise light, no new tobacco having as yet made its appearance on the market. Sales consisted chiefly of low leaf and lugs and prices were entirely satisfactory. The few hogheads of good leaf offered commanded fair figures. Loose market inactive, with no quotations.

THE SCHREVE COAL MINE.

The shaft at the new coal mine near Schreve has been sunk to the vein of coal, which is about five feet thick, and the work of mining in earnest will begin in a very few days.
A large force of hands is now at work and the number will be greatly increased next week. The coal is said to be of good quality and it is believed will be found in paying quantities.

A RESIDENCE BURNED.

The dwelling house of J. H. Allen, near Fairview, was destroyed by fire Monday night, with nearly all of its contents. Among the valuables destroyed was a portion of the religious library of the late Dr. S. Baker. Mrs. Allen's father. The loss by the fire is estimated at $2,500 to $3,000. There was $1,000 insurance on the house.

ASSIGNMENT IN CLARKSVILLE.

Faris Bros, proprietors of the Racket store in Clarksville, have assigned, by the pressure of a Western firm.
The liabilities are about $4,000, with assets about equal.

JACK FROST GETS READY FOR WINTER.

Miss Madge Bolt Rowan and Mr.
John Frost were married at Bardston
Tuesday. Among the wedding guests were the Count and Countess
de Noe, of Paris, France.

Fire broke out on the Midway at the Atlanta Exposition at 1 o'clock Tuesday afternoon. It started in the old plantation village at the end of the street by the explosion of a gasoline stove, and burned into Hansen-bach's shop. These buildings were burned.

FAIR WEEK.

The Fifth Annual Fair Begun Yesterday
With Good Weather.

The fair began yesterday with a pretty good attendance for the first day.

All of the forenoon was taken up with arranging the exhibits and preparing for the premium committees.
In the various exhibits in classes A to F this was necessarily slow, and the premiums had not been awarded when we closed our report.

Many of the displays are very full and handsome. Agricultural implements, carriages, wagons, cabinet work, leather goods, vegetables, cereals, fruits, flowers, pastry, preserves, needle work, tobacco, poultry, live stock and other exhibits were much better than usual. The special attractions in the afternoon were the great trot, for $15, the bicycle race for $10, the pony race for $10 and the shooting match between the Hopkinsville and Henderson Hunt Clubs.

These drew out a good crowd of city people after dinner. The program

WET OR DRY.

THE PROHIBITION FOLKS WANT A VOTE ON THE QUESTION.

Preparing for a Vote the Last of December—
Money Raised and a Campaign Committee Appointed.

Public meetings were held at the Christian Church Monday night and at the Court House Tuesday night and steps were taken to inaugurate a campaign on the question of prohibition in the county.

Committees were appointed, about $500 was raised in subscriptions, and the work of preparing for the conflict was put on foot.

Judge Landes was Chairman and Mr. J. H. Anderson Secretary of the meetings. Dr. T. S. McCall was made Chairman of the Executive Committee.

A committee was appointed to interview all Democratic and Republican candidates for councilmen and request them to pledge themselves not to issue any liquor license after Jan. 1st. Some of them gave the pledge and the others promised to be governed by the will of the people as expressed at the polls.

This attempt to bring the matter
directly into the politics of the city and perhaps jeopardize the success of the Democratic nominees, who were named before the question came up,
has given the Republicans renewed hope and they are preparing to take advantage of the Democratic dissension and nominate men on whichever side seems to offer hope of success in the doubtful wards.

Catching on to this scheme, the Democratic prohibitions, warned in time, will first elect a Democratic council and then attend to other matters.

Hopkinsville cannot afford to run
the risk of a return to the former condition of things. As between two evils, evils are preferable to Republicanism. It has been demonstrated that even with a local option law prohibition cannot be had under a Republican administration. Wm.
Ethel Duke, of near this city, will be solemnized at Hebron church, near Clark Hill, on Wednesday, Oct. 30,
at 10 a. m. No cards.

Dr. West is a Christian county boy
and a rising young physician, who is doing well in his chosen profession,
and his bride-to-be is the accomplished daughter of Mr. G. Duke,
a well-known farmer of this county.
McRae Willis—Mr. H. D. McRae
and Miss C. J. Willis, both of the Pembroke neighborhood, eloped to Clarksville Monday and were married.
There were seven guests by Messrs.
J. G. McRae and R. S. McRae.
Rev. A. U. Boone performed the ceremony, after which the bridal party
returned home.

ESCAPED THE GALLOW.

Jim Kline, the trucey Murderer, given a Life Sentence.

The verdict in the case of Jim Kline,
the brutal murderer of W. V. Adams,
the section boss at Gracely, for discharging him from his employ, is a disappointment to those who hoped that the law would give adequate punishment to this red-handed assasin of an unarmed man. It is, however, the same old story of justice thwarted, and the murderer is allowed to encumber the earth with his presence and live as a life-burden to the State whose laws he defied.

The trial occupied several days and a clear case of unprovoked murder was made out. The bloody details were substantially published in the Kentuckian at the time the affair occurred. The jury pronounced to try the case was composed of the following citizens: S. E. Chastain, James
I. Dunning, John White, C. T. Yan-sey, J. C. Courtney, T. J. Hadlock,
Chas. M. Markham, Richard Saddler,
P. C. Carter, Hilliard Lindsey, J. M.
Tinsley, James H. Gamble.

The jury returned a verdict Wednesday fixing Kline's punishment at life imprisonment. The sentence was so contrary to public expectation and contrary to Kline's own expectations that he was badly scared and expressed such fear of a mob that the jail was guarded Wednesday night. No mob came, nor was there any danger of one. The opportunity to lynch Kline was lost when he was allowed to leave Gracely with Adams' blood
still wet on his hands.

Hopkinsville Wm.
The Hopkinsville Gun Club defended the Henderson Gun yesterday
by the score of 143 to 149.

LAID TO REST.

Miss Cammie Russell's Grave Covered With Flowers.

The funeral services of Miss Cammie Russell were held at the Ninth street Presbyterian church Tuesday afternoon and the church would not hold half of the crowd in attendance.
Even the yard was crowded. No event that has occurred in Hopkinsville in recent years has caused such universal sorrow and sympathy as the melancholy death of this beautiful young girl.

Rev. Dr. Nourse preached the sermon in a very impressive manner.
His discourse was appropriate, touching and eloquently delivered. At its conclusion the body was followed to its last resting place by the largest procession of sympathizing friends that ever turned out at a funeral in Hopkinsville. There were eighty-five vehicles in the procession, and hundreds of people walked to the Cemtery. There were brief services, a song and a prayer, at the open grave and tenderly the mortal remains were laid away. The young men who acted as pall bearers were Clark Rag-dale, Alex. Bouley, Willie Trice, Stephen Trice, John Winfree, Jack
Armistead, Clifton Long and Mack Blackmon. The floral tributes were so numerous that the new made grave
was literally covered with the beautiful bouquets. Before dismissing the congregation, Dr. Nourse, on behalf of Mr. Russell and his family, thanked the people for their sympathy and kindness in the trouble that had befallen them.

The very full and accurate account of the melancholy death of Miss Russell, in Tuesday's KENTUCKIAN, was so complete that there is nothing more to add to the news features of the affair.

Miss Bessie Russell arrived from Staunton, Va., Tuesday morning, accompanied by her uncle, Mr. Cameron Brown, of Shelbyville, for whom the deceased was named. Many other relatives also came to attend the funeral and numerous friends from surrounding towns.

MATRIMONIAL.

The marriage of Dr. F. E. West, of Ferguson, in this county, and Miss Ethel Duke, of near this city, will be solemnized at Hebron church, near Clark Hill, on Wednesday, Oct. 30,
at 10 a. m. No cards.

Dr. West is a Christian county boy
and a rising young physician, who is
doing well in his chosen profession,
and his bride-to-be is the accomplished daughter of Mr. G. Duke,
a well-known farmer of this county.

and Miss C. J. Willis, both of the Pembroke neighborhood, eloped to Clarksville Monday and were married.
There were seven guests by Messrs.
J. G. McRae and R. S. McRae.
Rev. A. U. Boone performed the ceremony, after which the bridal party
returned home.

DOUGHERTY BURNED.—Mr. William
J. Dougherty, a young Fairview farmer, and Miss Mary L. Brumfield,
of this city, were married Wednesday evening. The ceremony took place at the home of the bride's parents, in the presence of a limited number of friends of the contracting parties.

COX-BOWWELL.—A pretty wedding occurred at the Christian Church at 9 o'clock last evening. The principals were Mr. Alex. S. Cox and Miss Bettie Bowwell.

The church was beautifully decorated with autumn leaves and flowers. There were ten attendants.
Miss Belle Moore and Mr. C. H. Tandy,
Miss Lizzie Mercer and Dr. Preston
Thomas; Miss Daisy Wood and Mr.
H. M. Bryan; Miss Jim Ellis and Mr.
Logan Bowwelle.

The church was filled to overflowing with the friends of the young couple, who wended their way to the altar to the sweet strains of the wedding march. Rev. J. W. Mitchell, pastor of the church, in a beautiful and impressive ceremony, said the words that united the young couple for life. After the wedding the bridal party was given a reception at the residence of Mr. R. L.
Boulevard, the bride's father.
Both parties to this union
are among the most popular young people in Hopkinsville's best society.

Mr. Cox is the head of the popular clothing firm of Cox & Boulevard, and is one of the best of the city's young merchants, energetic, capable, and highly esteemed. His charming bride is a petite brunette, bright, winsome and attractive. She is the second daughter of the family and is a favorite with all who have known her in social circles. They have the best wishes of a host of friends.

PROGRESS IN PHARMACY.

A Modern Laboratory and the Old-Time Apothecary Shop.

Shredding Machines Used by the Manufacturing Pharmacists—Extent of Their Business and its Effect on the Pharmaceutical Profession.

Special Chicago Letter.

Within the last few years the practice has been growing among physicians to carry their drug stores with them. The Hopkinson has always done this, and with the growth of facilities for condensing strong medicinal properties in small pills and tablets the Apothecary is gradually following in the footsteps of his brother of the other school.

This, of course, lightens the burden of the consumer—the sick who must pay the bills—and it is a progressive step. But like all such steps in progress, it is lamentable in many respects.

HOW THEY DID TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

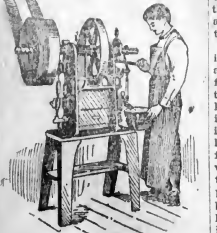

The venerated apothecary of old is gradually dying out. There is no longer any room for him, and he becomes a mere druggist, a merchant in medicines. True, a knowledge of chemistry is still necessary, and the pharmacist must possess a general scientific education equal, and even superior in some respects, to that of the practicing physician; but his usefulness as a chemist, analytical and manufacturing, is growing less from year to year.

We cannot wonder at the fate of the apothecary when we consider the extent and volume of the business transacted by the manufacturing chemists, or, more strictly speaking, manufacturing pharmacists, who are displacing him. Detroit, St. Louis and Chicago boast of several large houses which supply the entire west with products. Hundreds of thousands of tablets are turned out daily by a single firm in Chicago. The same firm, a few days ago, bought ten tons of cone grass in one shipment, all of which will be used in the manufacture of a single article.

These firms buy their crude drugs, their vegetable materia medica in tremendous quantities from New York brokers and send them directly from the producer. The salts, however, the preparations, and all the more intricate preparations are bought from three firms who are in reality the manufacturing chemists, although the manufacturing pharmacist ordinarily goes by the same name.

When the manufacturing pharmacist has procured his crude drug, he must dry it thoroughly. Sometimes it is air-dried, that is, all water except such as is held in solution by the air within the drug, but the more common procedure is to subject the drug to heat not exceeding 212 degrees Fahrenheit. In this way every particle of water is driven off, while the volatile substances are retained.

Then the drug is ground. There are many different kinds of grinders to suit varied conditions. The apothecary of former times was obliged to grind all his drugs with a hand machine similar to the ordinary coffee or coffee mill. A large iron mortar was used for pounding and smashing hard drugs. Occasionally, when large quan-

ties were to be ground, the drug was taken to some Crosses who possessed a chaser mill. This machine consisted of a concave revolving disk which contained the crude drug and a number of porcelain balls which rolled about and ground the drug into a powder. As the powder began to form, the motion of the circular motion tended to move it over the wall of the disk and in this way it was collected in a vessel under the machine. The principle of grinding with porcelain balls is still in use, but the machine is in the shape of a large hollow ball. Into this are put the crude drug and the porcelain balls; the vessel is closed airtight and revolves until the powder has reached the required fineness. The vessel is then turned around with its mouth directly over a small box, a corer is thrown over the top, and the stopper is removed. The valuable contents drop into the box below, and little or none of it escapes into the air.

But there are many drugs where grinding by rapidity of motion is not desirable, such as gum resin and all drugs containing volatile oils which would be injured by heating. For such drugs a machine similar to a wringer with iron cylinders is used in our large laboratories. One of the rollers revolves five times as fast as the other, and in this way the drug is not merely crushed, but torn to pieces. The machine is small and revolves slowly, but the unequal rapidity of motion of the two cylinders gives it the power to grind almost the hardest drugs, such as colocynth seed, which is so hard that it cannot be ground with a heavy stone hammer. Similar machines are now used in our large flour mills, and they possess the inestimable advantage of exerting the entire motive power of the seed, instead of peeling away the husk and with it much of the most valuable portion of the seeds, such as the phosphorus.

There are two other kinds of mills in common use. One consists of two iron plates which rub against each other and are so close that the drug, while the other is needed especially for grinding "impalpably fine," that is so fine that the powder feels like a perfectly smooth mass. This is included in iron casing and contains a vertical wheel with protruding teeth or beaters which throw the drug against an iron setting and the circular motion of the wheel turns at the rate of 3,000 revolutions per minute.

All of these grinding machines are now in common use among manufacturing pharmacists, and each possesses advantages for certain purposes, but the poor apothecary of twenty-five years ago was obliged to grind all his drugs as best he could in his primitive hand mill or at best in a chaser machine.

Solid extracts are obtained in two ways. The old-fashioned way, and one which is still in use, is to subject the herbs to strong pressure until all of the juices had been squeezed out. This method is then used to ascertain the consistency of honey. About fifty years ago the making of fluid extracts began. Four of them were entered into the Pharmacopoeia of 1820. The original idea was that one minim of the fluid should represent one grain of the drug. In this way the apothecary could know exactly what quantity of the extract he would have to take to obtain a certain quantity of active medicinal properties. This difficulty had always been a stumbling block for the apothecary, and, strange to say, it was not until after a great deal of experimenting that the present simple system of prescription was devised.

Nowadays, the ground drug is put into a glass or stone jar called percolan. It has an opening at the bottom covered with a metal screen and filter paper. Upon the drug is poured pure alcohol, which in passing through the screen to the active properties and comes out as a finished fluid extract. The solid extract may then be obtained by simple evaporation. When the process is a simple one, many details must be observed, especially as to the density of the fluid.

After all the medicinal properties have been extracted, the mass left in the percolan contains an increased amount of alcohol. This residue is placed in huge tanks and the alcohol is redistilled—recovered by heating. This recovered alcohol is not however always used for medicinal purposes, as some manufacturers believe that it is impossible to separate it completely from certain volatile substances contained in the drugs. It is claimed by experts that the recovered alcohol always retains a purple color which is as easy to detect as the smell of camphor.

The making of tablets has developed into a complicated industry. Tablets are all the fashion nowadays. Twenty-five years ago a dough was made and tablet after tablet was pressed out by hand and rolled through a sirup to give it a sugar coating. Machines are now in use which make from 300 to 400 tablets per minute. The dry powder flows from a small rubber feed to a steel plate which contains a hole the size of the tablet. As the powder fills the hole a punch from above shoots down and presses it with terrific force. Another punch below the plate then throws the pressed mass up and an elastic band to the feed pushes the tablet to the side at the same moment that it refills the hole.

The tablet is now finished except the sugar coating. For this purpose a hollow vessel of Brooklyn dimensions is provided. A sirup is put in with the tablets and the vessel starts to revolve, sometimes under a gentle application of heat. As the wheel rotates the sugar will precipitate and coat the tablets with wonderful accuracy and evenness.

The pillmaking industry is on the wane. Tablets are more popular and machine facilities for pillmaking are fewer. The pill is made from a dough which is rolled out to any thickness desired, up to one one-hundredth of an inch, with almost mathematical accuracy by placing it between two boards which approach by means of a screw. The dough is then pressed into little round balls by concave cylindrical surfaces which are pressed in at right angles. The coating process is similar to the one employed with tablets.

HARD LINES.

Medical Men Suffering from Too Much Fatigue.

The medical men of Brussels, according to the London News, are passing through a trial of much the same sort as that which lately afflicted their professional brethren in Cork. They complain of the inadequate pay they receive from the societies formed by the practicing people to secure medical attendance on the cooperative principle. In Brussels, as in many places elsewhere, the poor club together for medical aid, and engage a practitioner, who attends them for a fee which is almost purely nominal. This might be endured and is ended, on the consideration that the insufficient offerings of the poor man will be made good by the liberality of those who are better off in the world. But that is just where Brussels fails. The well-to-do middle class has contrived to secure a footing in the "mutualist" societies.

Persons who are quite able to make good the deficit in the medical exchequer help to increase it. They come in as poor men in such numbers that the unhappy practitioner hardly knows where to look for his legitimate fee. He has protested, but his last state is worse than his first. The protest was addressed to the offenders only, and they had no difficulty in persuading the vast majority of the genuine working class members to make common cause with them.

The doctors are the best abused persons in Brussels just now, and twenty of them have resigned their office in the mutualist societies. As prelude to a possible strike of doctors, this seems to signalize one of the most awful dangers of the time. It would be awkward, however, if—a pure coincidence, of course—the death rate should diminish during the continuation of the strike.

MUSKELON LITERATURE.

The Fruit Has Formed the Theme of the Lovers and Writers.

Muskelons have played a part in history. They caused the fall of Arques and led Mack to the capitulation of Ulm. One day, says the Paris Le Temps, Abbe Bernis came to dine with the marquis de Pompadour, who was furious because the maître d'hôtel had forgotten to serve melon. "Shall I get two muskelons for you, master?" He paid two louis for them. "Delightful," said the marquis. "My compliments, Monsieur l'abbé." Bernis was happy until the moment when the doctor struck his eye. "What makes you sad?" asked the pompadour. "Oh, madame la marquise," he replied, "my friend Martin and I have only one pair of trousers for both of us, and he is waiting for it to go to dinner." The pompadour gave a pension of three hundred thousand livres and an abbey to him. His friend became, under the same protection, archbishop of Lyons. One evening a specialist was explaining to Bonaparte what he should have done if Mantua had not surrendered. Bonaparte asked: "You have been in the wars, is that correct?" The specialist replied: "No, but I have read Polybius, Marshal Saxe and Chevalier Folard." Bonaparte said: "Oh, you are learned!" Do you know how to make coffee?" replied the strategist. Bonaparte continued: "General!" indignantly. Bonaparte answered: "You do not know how to make melons grow, although you have read La Quintaine, and yet you talk to me about how to make coffee?" Bonaparte replied: "Polybius. Good day, sir," Bonaparte said.

SOME STAGE GAGS.

Little Things That Made a Variety Comedian's Auditors Laugh.

As the favorite comedian appeared before the audience of a local variety theater with the limp so characteristic of him, there was a ripple of applause. The only way that he could properly introduce himself was by singing a song, and he at once bravely complied with the time-honored custom, says the Philadelphia Call.

"I wore a new pair of shoes the other day," he announced, after the piano player had stopped. "They didn't hurt much, but I met two policemen. Then I got pinched."

"Something else I must tell you," he continued. "I was sleeping in a cellar the other night when I woke up and saw five mice playing poker. They were deep in the game—raising and calling and raking in the chips. They didn't notice a cat belted near by, but I did."

"Suddenly the puss made a leap. The game ended with the same old story—everything went into the kitty."

Spectacles in the Collection.

A novel method of correcting a clergyman's mistakes in reading is reported in the Church Review. During the collection after a sermon one Sunday, a gentleman in the congregation quietly took off his spectacles and put them on the plate. The church warden courteously handed them back, supposing them to have been put there in absence of mind, but the donor again deposited them on the plate, and not wishing to make a scene, the official finished his duties, and the spectacles were duly presented with the other alms. However, after the service he took them down to the donor—a stranger—and said he feared they were given by mistake. Judge of his surprise on being assured that it was no mistake—that the clergyman who read the prayers was unable to make blunders in reading that he presumed he could not see, and so he presented him with a pair of spectacles.

A Cure for Slender.

In Poland it was once the custom to sentence all who wished to go on all fours and bark like a dog for the space of a quarter of an hour. This mode of punishment was introduced during the reign of Charles V. but it was soon abolished, as it had to be applied so frequently that his majesty's rest was disturbed, for the barking went on all the forenoon while the courts were sitting.

A SERIOUS AFFAIR.

The Old-Time Breakfast of Which Newly Married Ones Partook.

The old-fashioned wedding breakfast was a training in fortitude for others beside the bridegroom, says a London journal. It was the nurse of many virtues for some half-dozen or more of his friends. Little do the unthinking youths who nowadays assemble at a wedding to "guy" the "best man" suspect quietly of his spectacles and put this description would not have had to "dree his waird" alone. His waird would have been freed conjointly with him by a "second best," a "third best," a "fourth best," and a "fifth best" down sometimes in a descending scale of excellence to an "eight best" man. To every bridesmaid there was a "groomsman," and to the youngest groomsman there was a speech, the response to the toast of the bridesmaid's health. It was an effort of oratory demanding extraordinary tact—a demand which, we need not say, was very rarely satisfied—in the youth who would steer successfully between the Scylla of boorishness and the Charybdis of vulgar familiarity; and many were the groomsman whom one or other of these twin whirlpools swept away. But the survivors, even the submerged—arous the stronger for their plunge.

They had familiarized themselves in imagination with the position of a bridesmaid, often even assisting their imaginative powers by a flirtation with their allotted bridesmaids; and they sometimes returned home nerved for future feats of matrimonial daring of which their degenerate descendants seem incapable.

THE SCIENCE OF WOOLING.

How It Is Practiced in Many Strange Lands.

Talk with a Man Who Has Made the Subject a Study—The Origin of Some Old Wedding Customs—The Modern Marriage Broker.

Written for This Paper.

There are facts and facts. Some are vicious, others lead to the loss of time and money, and still others are perfectly harmless. Not long ago I met a long-haired gentleman who has devoted years of travel to the study of marriage customs in various parts of the world. He allowed his love for the subject to develop into an innocent and, according to his own testimony, spent thousands of dollars in the purchase of wedding gifts peculiar to different countries. But in spite of this seeming extravagance his fat has remained perfectly harmless. In fact, it has proved itself of great value, as it enables me to present to the readers of this paper facts in condensed form whose collection has cost many thousands of dollars.

Marriage among primitive people, according to my informant, is purely a business transaction. The natives of southern Siberia, for instance, buy their wives from the parents, paying for them sums ranging from twenty to seventy-five dollars, according to the physical attractiveness of the girls. Among the Tartars the same custom prevails, but the bride is more valuable, some commanding as much as one thousand dollars. A still more simple way of wooing is that of the Tchukches, a Siberian tribe, among whom the would-be groom serves his prospective father-in-law for a certain number of years, according to agreement, like Jacob served Laban in patriarchal times.

A wedding in Korea is described as a unique ceremony. The groom, clothed in a gorgeous gown hired for the occasion, is preceded by his best man who carries a goose on his arm. The procession marches toward a small table before which the groom bows profoundly. Then he receives his attendant of the goose, whose feet are securely tied, and sits down. Soon afterward the bride, accompanied by two elderly females, makes her appearance. Her face is painted white, with gleaming red lips on the forehead, on each cheek and on the lips, and her eyes are sealed. She is led across a large mat in the center of the room. At the end of the apartment her attendants place a white handkerchief over her clasped hands and lead her back to the mat. At this moment the bridegroom is supposed to appear at the other end of the mat. The bride salutes him by raising her arms to the level of her eyes and bowing these times. This greeting is returned in kind by the groom. Then they sit down at opposite ends of the mat, and the groom—an emblem of fidelity—is released after having been fed by the bride. This completes the ceremony and the twin are one.

In Burnish the love-deck again follows his informant for several days at a respectful distance. If she is favorably disposed toward him she will smile at him on the third day, and young man can begin his wooing in earnest. In China girls are betrothed at a very early age, many being betrothed as early as ten years of age. After marriage the girl is taken to her husband's home, where she becomes the virtual slave of her mother-in-law, whose every word is law. Among the Bengalis of India the maiden does the chasing. She pursues the youth of her choice in true foot-race style. When she has caught him he is carried to a river or creek by the girl and her friends and immersed with a vengeance, a proceeding which always terminates in a wedding.

All of the Mohammedan peoples and prison, including the Turks, Egyptians, Persians and Arabs, cling to the tradition that it is improper for the groom to see his bride until after the marriage ceremony is performed. Among the Malays prevails another ancient custom. After the couple has been married the bride rides through the principal streets of the village on a mule, surrounded by a picturesque mob of relatives, who exhort the villagers to contribute victuals of various kinds toward the establishment of the new household.

In rural Russia the bride is conducted to the church by two young men and the groom is escorted by two bridesmaids. After the marriage ceremony the bride is conducted to her new home by the relatives of her husband and the groom is placed in charge of his wife's people. The Kirgizes, sometimes called the lords of the steppe, are very fair towards their young women. If a girl objects to the youth who wants to marry her she has the right to challenge him to a foot race which is conducted on such a basis that she can easily escape, as the sympathy of the crowd usually is with the maiden.

But the material supplied by my informant is so voluminous that I could fill columns after columns with interesting details of primal courtship; and I might as well close here and devote a few paragraphs to the symbolical customs in vogue in different lands.

Not so very many years ago betrothment was recognized by the laws of most European countries. These enactments, whose penalty was excommunication, have, however, been repealed. Instead of being made a social outcast the man who now refuses to marry a girl after having pledged his truth becomes defendant in a breach-of-promise suit.

Betrothment in all civilized countries has always been sealed by a pledge. In Turkey and other Mohammedan countries the groom-to-be sends to his prospective bride a gold bracelet which is worn around the neck. In China red cards are exchanged in token of an engagement. The ancient Romans exchanged rings, a custom which has been adopted by all civilized nations.

Moldavia, a province of the kingdom of Roumania, is the home of the time-honored custom of throwing grain at newly-married couples, which is equivalent to expressing a wish for their prosperity. Another custom prevailing in that and adjoining provinces compels the bride to sweep the hearth of her new home in the presence of the assembled guests to indicate that she is willing to assume the duties of a housewife.

In the country towns of Germany the custom of throwing broken dishes and earthenware vessels against the door of the house occupied by a bride couple is still maintained, the object of the fusillade being the driving-away of "scooping spirits." This custom also prevails in Sardinia. In some parts of the orient the bride cuts off her hair in tokens of submission to her husband, and in certain sections of Russia she pulls off her husband's boots, the groom at the same time giving her a slight cut with a whip.

Adulteries are still announced in newspapers and by card in Germany and Austria as well as most other European countries. In the United States this custom has never obtained a foothold, except among the Jews and the descendants of the immigrants. An important factor of comparatively recent development in matrimonial negotiations is the marriage broker, whose office in this profession has existed from time immemorial. In parts of Asia and in the West Indies, of Europe, they have always been considered important personages; but in modern society they were not recognized until very recently. The marriage broker of Paris is the prince of his profession. He usually maintains a creditable establishment on one of the fashionable boulevards. Applicants for husbands or wives are listed and scheduled. They have to give their names, age, titles, possessions and prospects. Their statements are carefully investigated, and if found correct, they become clients of the establishment. The modus operandi of the brokers is as follows: After an applicant and his wants have been entered on the books, the agent proceeds to employ sub-agents who are familiar with the financial circumstances of all wealthy or titled families. These designate a man or woman, as the case may be, whose social position corresponds with the requirements of the applicant. The agent next ascertains what places of public amusement are frequented by the person selected, and secures an introduction. It is then a very easy matter to bring the two young people together; and in nine cases out of ten a marriage results.

For his trouble the broker receives an entrance fee and a certain percentage of the bride's dot, without which no marriage is made in continental Europe. Matrimonial marriages have been made to establish similar matrimonial bureaus in the United States, but hitherto, let us thank the good sense of our people, without success.

DEER HUNT AT NIGHT.

How Spectators in the Adirondacks Quarry Their Game.

Long lake is one of the best feeding grounds for deer in the Adirondacks, growing as it does a kind of spruce wood and cranberry, of which the deer is very fond. The process involved in hunting deer, says an experienced hunter, is very curious and interesting in the guide's own words, "one must know the nature of the animal to succeed. It is the custom of this animal to browse on its way down to the water at night for drink, and the slight crash made in coming through the brush betrays them to the guide, who, with his companion seated in a boat, is slowly and noiselessly paddling close to shore, and nearer and nearer to the locality from whence the sound comes. Although there are many other noises abroad on the night air none can mistake this particular one. The guide holds his breath or emits it in quick gasps. Absolute silence on the part of the inmates of the boat prevails. The night wind blows softly. The stars are reflected in the still water. The air is heavy with the fragrance from woods, flowers and trees. The boat drifts or is propelled so gently that it is calculated to deceive one's own senses as to whether, after all, it is not at all a dream. The occasional sound of the paddle sounds like the ripple of water or the lapping of the waves against the shore, when suddenly another and unmistakable crash is heard close at hand. The cap is off the jack lantern, instantly a search-light is thrown over the lake and adjacent woods ashore. Two bright eyes are seen, a terrified whistling is heard, and the deer starts to run, but it is too late; a white and bang and a fine four-year-old buck falls to the ground. The tense straining of every muscle and nerve is relieved and followed by the wildest excitement and commotion as the boat is hastily paddled to shore.

CHECK ON TOBACCO.

In Some German Towns the Weed Is Prohibited on the Streets.

The consumption of tobacco of all kinds in France, according to recently compiled statistics, is nearly one hundred and twenty-five million pounds per year, says the Milwaukee Wisconsin. An analysis of the figures shows that the people of northern France use nearly four times as much per capita as those in the southern provinces. Almost every country of Europe, however, consumes more smoking tobacco in proportion to its population than does France.

This is especially the case with Germany. In many small German towns smoking in the streets is forbidden. Less than fifty years ago if a man ventured on the streets of Berlin with a cigar in his mouth he would be liable to arrest. The same provision existed until 1846 in Vienna, though the law was not observed by the populace. The town of Broock, in Holland, which is said to be the cleanest city in the world, has long forbidden the people within its walls to smoke after sunset in the streets unless with a covered pipe. "In order that the citizens may not be blown away by smoking with an uncovered pipe in German or Austrian forests is an offense that is rigorously punished, and, as a result of this regulation, forest fires are rare in those countries."

SUNLIGHT AND COLORS.

Remarkable Changes Produced by Manipulation.

Every one knows the danger of mistakes in attempting to select colored articles in artificial light. Only the white light of the sun, containing all the elements of color known to man, can be trusted in such cases to reveal the actual hues possessed by the objects under examination. Some interesting scientific experiments on the effect of light in revealing or concealing color were lately made by Dr. M. W. Vogel, the distinguished physicist and astronomer in Berlin.

Starting with the fact that in a photographic "dark room," filled with ruby colored light, bright scarlet cloth appears white, it was shown that when an object is viewed in a room illuminated by a dark room, the power of the eye to distinguish colors is temporarily lost, and all objects appear of various shades of white and black.

When objects are again viewed in light, the colors of objects undergo remarkable changes. The quantity of light alone also affects the appearance of color, particularly certain tints of blue and violet, for which reason, even in the absence of artificial lights, a person purchasing colored goods in a dark store must carry them to the door or window, where a strong illumination can be obtained, in order to make certain of the precise shade.

Gambling in Sydney.

Public attention has lately been called in Sydney to the serious increase of gambling in that city. The local inspector general of police has made a report on the subject, in which he says that the evil is largely on the increase and that a considerable number of the most reckless in it are making large fortunes at the cost of their victims. In twenty months there have been four hundred convictions for gambling, and fines of various amounts have been imposed, but the traffic goes on flourishing in such a way as to demonstrate that the fines are utterly futile as deterrents, and that they bear but a small proportion to the profits. When the last mail left arrangements were being made for calling a public meeting to consider the subject.

Savage Spanish Cat.

Cows held up a railroad train in Estremadura, Spain, a few days ago. The engine ran a bull down, cutting him in two, and then could not be started. While the train and passengers were trying to help the engineer, the rest of the herd attacked them; they had to take shelter in the cars, and were kept there till night, when the herd went off.

We sold more majestic ranges last year than were ever sold before in the same time, and the reason they sell is because they are the best and most economical baker's made. The oven is the most important part of a cooking apparatus, the fire box is the digestive organ and the draft is the circulation. These organs in the Majestic are different from any stove or range made. The Majestic oven is the most sensitive, the fire box the most economical and the draft the simplest and most perfect.

Mr. Golden is a preacher of unusual force and attractiveness, and will doubtless draw the people to hear him and impress them for good by his ministrations.

The members of this church celebrated the 12th of October, the anniversary of the marriage of their pastor, Dr. Phillips, by a goodly contribution to the stores of his pantry and larder. Their action was a commendable surprise to the pastor and wife, and was as highly appreciated as it was thoughtful and generous.

A Dime in His Windpipe.

R. J. Hinchcliff, a newspaper solicitor of Pittsburgh, after carrying a silver dime in his windpipe for nearly two years, coughed it up the other night. Last December a year ago his child, while sitting on his knee, playfully placed a dime with which she had been playing in her father's mouth. Hinchcliff, by a movement of the head, accidentally swallowed the coin. Doctors told him he need not be worried, as the dime would dissolve and pass away. They refused to perform an operation. Hinchcliff was subject to violent fits of coughing after swallowing the money, and he was awakened from sleep by such a fit the other evening. Jumping out of bed he coughed up the dime. Its surface had been corroded. Hinchcliff is carrying the piece as a souvenir.

Lays Plans For Party Organization, Has Its Tricks Made Public.

In order that Democrats may see the kind of organization they will be compelled to contend with in the coming State election we publish, in full, without change or alteration, a copy of a letter that Dr. Godfrey Hunter, Congressman from the Third Congressional District and Chairman of the Republican State Executive Committee, has been sending to the county campaign committees throughout the State. It is a fair sample of Republican literature, and it contains evidence that the Republicans are adopting sly and shrewd plans for the campaign, and will, with party halbers and party lances, attempt to lead or drive their voters to the polls in November. After reading this letter we believe that every true Democrat will feel duty bound to do his utmost to prevent a party which employs such means from getting control of our State. Here is the letter:

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 20, 1895.

My Dear Sir:—Ten days ago I expressed to the address of the Chairman of the Republican Committee of your county several books for precinct and school district organizations. The precinct books should contain the name and postoffice address, with political affiliation, etc., of every voter in the precinct. These names are obtained from the school district committee, who, in their record in his book the name, postoffice address, political affiliation, etc., of all voters in his district or precinct, and they return a copy of the precinct list to the school district committee. The school district committee should make a duplicate of his book, and send it to the Chairman of the County Committee. The school district committee should be handed to the Chairman of the County Committee.

Some days previous to the election in order to enable him to become familiar with it. This book will prevent illegal voting. Any one attempting to vote whose name is not recorded in it should be challenged. The challenger should check the Republican as they vote, and those failing to vote up to a certain hour, say 12 o'clock noon, should be sent for. When the boundary of any school district extends to another voting precinct, which is often the case, the precinct committee should prescribe the limit in which the school district committee should work, and this boundary ought not to extend beyond the precinct. The school district committee is one of the most important individuals connected with this organization. He is in direct touch with the voter, and should subdivide his boundary as to have a good man in charge of a certain number of voters, say ten or twelve, and be responsible for their getting to the polls. It is believed that an organization of this sort will get a large per cent. of the silent or stay-at-home votes to the polls in November, and thus elect our State and local tickets.

If your County Chairman has failed to furnish you your quota of these books, please see him and get the number for your work.

Your friend,
W. G. HUNTER.

Hopkinsville's Young Authors.

The little book of stories by Miss Florence Frances Brasher, which was recently put on the market here, is spoken of in words of high commendation by all who have read it. There are three stories, "In a Day of Darkness," "Where Deep Waters Flow," and "A Better World." The two last are novelties of fifty or more pages, the first a short story. They are all written in a charming style, entirely new from affectation and bombast, very convincing, and that young authors fall into, her descriptions are well executed and not overdone. Her characters well drawn and the plots admirably developed. On the whole the stories are interesting in their subject matter, pure in conception and delineated in well chosen words. We regard the young author as a girl of unusual talent—for she is still little more than a child—and the people of Hopkinsville, when they consider that she is dependent upon her pen for a livelihood, should encourage and aid her by helping her to dispose of the entire edition of her meritorious little book. It sells at 5c at the book stores, or may be ordered by mail.

A Sennamulists Finds His Wife Alive In Her Coffin.

A strange psychological phenomenon is puzzling the residents of McDonald, a small settlement in Pennsylvania. Thomas Wilcox came to that place from St. Louis several years ago and purchased a farm. Mrs. Wilcox's health was not very good, but the couple were remarkably devoted to each other. Wilcox was a somnambulist, and oftentimes at night his wife would dream of a certain spot or place, and he, as under influences beyond his control, would arise and go to the scene if it was near by. He could never give any explanation of this action and was apparently much surprised when he awoke.

During a recent thunder shower lightning struck the Wilcox house and passed through the room in which Mrs. Wilcox was sitting. Though no marks of the field could be found on her person, says the St. Louis Republic, she had been miraculously restored to life and the result proved apparently fatal. Her husband was prostrated with grief and refused to believe her dead, saying he felt continually as if she were calling him. He insisted that life still remained in the body, and the corpse was kept for burial four days. Then the friends insisted on a funeral, and the remains were laid to rest. After the services, Wilcox, who had passed three sleepless nights, fell into an exhausted slumber, in which his friends left him.

Shortly after midnight he entered a somnambulist's state, and, arising from the couch, went to a shed, where he procured a spade. Then he made his way to the cemetery, a distance of a quarter of a mile, where he began frantically digging at his wife's grave. The earth was loose and it did not require much labor. As he neared the casket the nervous tension increased, and, dropping his spade, he began digging with both hands. When the outer covering of the box was removed, with supernatural strength he reached loose the cover of the coffin, placing his arms around the body, raised it to a sitting posture. There was a faint gasp, the corpse opened its eyes, gave an ear-piercing shriek, and fell heavily back into the casket. The shriek awoke Wilcox, and he found himself standing in an open grave over the body of his wife. The ends of his fingers were raw and bleeding, where he had scraped the soil from the casket. There was the rustle of a piece of cloth and then it dawned upon him that his wife was alive. Quickly he carried her to a neighboring farmhouse, where the frightened inmates administered such restoratives as they had at hand.

When Mrs. Wilcox was sufficiently recovered she said the last she remembered was sitting in a chair in the room of her husband, until she was awakened by an oppressive effort to breathe. Trying to raise her hand it came in contact with the coffin lid, and then the awful thought flashed over her that she was buried alive. In that one moment of supreme agony she concentrated all her efforts, and made one great mental call on her husband for help and fainted away. Mr. Wilcox remembers nothing of the occurrence from the time he retired until he found himself standing in his wife's grave.

Physicians say the electric bolt stunned out did not suit, though the trance was so like death as to be indistinguishable. They claim that the resurrection was the result of mental telegraphy, the thought of the wife impressing itself upon the mind of the husband.

BE CAREFUL OF YOUR CARD.

Its Promiscuous Distribution May Lead You Into Trouble.

A new sort of swindler has arrived and seems to be doing quite well. He is remarkably well dressed, and meets his victim in swagger restaurants and cafes. He is embarrassed at the loss of his pocketbook. Excessively gotten up, with a diamond or two for show, says the New York World, he asks for the loan of fifty cents. "It's embarrassing, but any gentleman is liable to be put in such a fix."

The man approached generally gives up the money, as much, perhaps, to get rid of the fellow as for any other reason. "Would the lender give the borrower his card?" He'd like to send the money in the morning. "Certainly," and with many protestations of thanks the fraud takes it and disappears.

Later in the day, when he arrives home, the obliging man prepares to dress for dinner, but can't find his evening garb. He inquires, and learns that a well-dressed gentleman had presented a card. The card has a request that the dress suit be given to the bearer. It was the paste-board he had given the fraud, who had penciled the request himself.

Sometimes the request is changed, and the scam is allowed to "look for an umbrella he left in my room." Anything he can find of value he appropriates.

A DISAPPOINTED PANTHER.

An Oregon Baby Saved from a Terrible Fate.

A Little Black-and-Tan Dog Gave the Warning That Brought Assistance Before It Was Too Late—The Animal Killed.

There is a curious trait not generally mentioned by zoologists, but universally attributed by all back woodsmen and old hunters to the American panther and other members of the feline family. It is that these animals cover with forest leaves or otherwise conceal their prey, and then wait for some other opportunity for final attack and capture. It is a device only of the female, resorted to while she is rearing her young. This attribute would seem to be well placed according to the following true story:

Joel Kramer settled with his family in a log cabin on Black river, in southern Washington, about a year ago. One afternoon, about a year ago, he went out to camp to split some cedar shakes for the roof of a new barn. With him went his six-year-old boy, Bobby, and Lion, a little black and tan dog. While Kramer worked in the little clearing Bobby and Lion disappeared in the surrounding thickets. Towards evening the dog came running into camp, uttering sharp, nervous barks of alarm. The experienced woodsman at once concluded that something unusual had happened to his little boy.

"Go, Lion, quick! Show me where Bobby is!" exclaimed Kramer. Off darted the dog, followed by the now fully aroused father. Man and dog made their way through the brush for fully a quarter of a mile, when they came to the base of a large cedar, under which they found a strange-looking mound of dry leaves freshly scooped together. Lion dashed to the spot and began a vigorous scratching, jumping from side to side and uttering nervous whines. It was but the work of a moment for Kramer to brush away the leaves, disclosing his little boy sound asleep. To him the case was as clear as daylight. A case cougar had found the boy asleep, covered him with leaves and soon would return with her kittens to dine royally. Deep furs were thrown over the creature's face in scraping together the leaves showed that the cougar was a monster.

When Bobby was fully awake he confirmed his father's conjectures by saying that he and the dog lay down together and he went to sleep. He rightly concluded that Mrs. Cougar and her children would not return to the banquet until near midnight, Kramer determined that he would change the menu. So he rearranged the mound of leaves over a little heap of rotten wood, to make it look exactly as he had found it, and returned to the cabin with Bobby and Lion.

He and Dave Peterson, his hired man, set off at once with a Winchester and shotgun. Arriving at the decay mound, which had not been disturbed, the men took up four positions in the lower branches of a young cedar of dense foliage. They were about twenty feet in from the ground, and about fifteen yards in a straight line from the mound.

Hardly were they settled in their seats, when the crackling of dry twigs and the rustling of leaves announced the approach of the wary animals. Next was heard the "talking" of the dam to her young ones, a kind of vocalization exactly like the "talking" of a cat to her kittens. Kramer caught the first glimpse of the monster; and without the movement of a muscle, save a glance of his eyes, pointed her out to Dave. She was accompanied by four three-quarter-grown kittens. As the mother stealthily crept along, lashing her sides with her great tail, the young ones were gamboling in the wildest abandon, clawing and rolling over one another in regular kitten fashion. Having approached to within eight or ten yards of the leafy mound, the beast emitted a peculiar note of warning which was instantly observed by the young ones, for they ceased their play, dropped their heads and nervously huddled behind the dam.

The scene now began to grow strangely fascinating. With deep-drawn breath and hearts pounding with painful loudness, the men waited the critical moment. The huge creature, with her great, staring eyes riveted upon the leafy mound, dropped upon her belly and crawled rather than walked. When within fifteen feet of the goal she paused for the awful spring. The horrible settling of her hind feet, to get a firm rest upon the ground, braced her for the effort. Gracefully rising high in air, as if springing from a tightly-drawn bow, she alighted upon her supposed prey with an appalling cry, bewailing a scream and roar that made the woods resound long and loud. For a moment the beast was hidden by flying leaves and dust. When once convinced that she had been thoroughly cheated, she stood for a moment motionless, her body tense with anger. That moment was her last.

"Crack! Crack!" went the two guns, almost simultaneously. Again the cougar vaulted into the air, but this time only to fall dead beneath the tree that sheltered her slayers. A ball from the Winchester had crashed through the brain of the beast, while Dave had riddled its head with buckshot.

It was only pastime to kill the kittens, who were too much frightened to escape. The old one weighed three hundred and fifty pounds, and was a fine specimen of the muzzled end of the tail.

In the household of the Kramers there was joy that night.

She Knows How.

A woman noted for the good food provided for her family at a comparatively small cost says: "I found the outlay for meats the largest weekly item, and so I paid special attention to all those dishes made from meats that do not require the most expensive cuts. I buy oysters by the bushel and open them myself; they will keep a long time in cool weather if you learn how to lay them on the cellar bottom. I can my own fruits and such vegetables as corn and tomatoes."—N. Y. Post.

THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS

Saved by Following the Advice of Government Entomologists.

But the Actual Money Loss to the Farmers Is Not So Great as Might at First Appear—Folks Remedies Exposed.

Secretary Morton, in an interview recently, said:

"I have noticed in the newspapers lately a review of a compilation by Prof. Pantan, of the Ontario Agricultural college, in which he brings together once more the figures concerning the annual loss from the work of destructive insects. These figures, mostly drawn from American sources, and mainly from publications of the United States department of agriculture, serve a good purpose in directing attention to the necessity for active work on the part of economic entomologists, but in one way, they are somewhat misleading. The losses to individual farmers, and occasionally to the agricultural population of a more or less restricted portion of the country, are frequently very great, summed up in dollars and cents, yet the actual money loss to the agriculturalists of the country at large is by no means expressed by these same figures, for the simple reason that the loss of a portion of the crop means an increased price for the remainder. We may express the loss from insects in terms of bushels of produce, but in turning it into money value this factor of increased price must not be overlooked.

"There is no doubt, however, of the actual and great money value to individuals as the result of the labors of the government and state entomologists. For example, a prominent fruit-grower in Virginia says that his income has been increased during the past few years by from three thousand to four thousand dollars annually as a result of following the advice of the entomologist of the United States department of agriculture. The proprietor of a large orchard in Maryland said that the advice of Mr. L. O. Howard, the present entomologist, at a time last fall when more than three thousand of his young trees were badly affected by the San Jose scale, had resulted in a clear saving to him of five thousand dollars. In California it is a common estimate that the difference between the income from a healthy orchard and one infested with insects is about seventy-five dollars per acre for a single season. The expenditure of three dollars per acre for the use of the methods ascertained by the entomologists, will keep the orchard healthy. The work of the division of entomology during the past few months on the cotton-boll weevil in southern Texas has resulted in the saving of many thousands of dollars to cotton planters in that section, if the recommendations are followed.

"These instances are new, and are simply examples of saving work which is going on from year to year. It is probable that the aggregate they result in the saving of even greater sums than do the much rarer but more striking instances, such as the introduction by the department of the Australian ladybird into California, by which the pest of the citrus industry of that state was saved from destruction.

"Not a small item in the total value to be accredited to the entomological work of the department is the exposure of 'fake' remedies. Only the present season the entomologist has shown that the 'cure' for the 'cure' of the New England locusts, which was able to locate trees against the ravages of leaf-eating insects, had been based on its claims upon the disclosed application of a method which was proved to be totally inefficacious fifty years ago.

"Incidentally, and although not pertaining strictly to agricultural interests, I might mention that the application of a remedy against mosquitoes, first practically used by our Mr. Howard, and recommended in his publications during the past year or two, has resulted, in two instances at least, in rendering habitable large sections near Long Island sound, and in so greatly increasing the value of real estate that the owners have made large sums of money as a direct result."—Washington Star.

Some Strange Visiting Cards.

Calling in Corea must be a very difficult performance, if, as a London journal has recently stated, the ordinary visiting cards there are a foot square. The same journal goes on to say that the savages of Dahomey announce their visits to each other by a wooden board as the branch of a tree artistically carved. This is sent on in advance, and the visitor, on taking leave, pockets his card, which probably serves him for many years. The natives of Sumatra also have a visiting card, consisting of a piece of wood about a foot long and decorated with a bunch of straw and a knife.

CANDLES AS PERQUISITES.

One of the Queen's Official Observance in Paris.

A Paris official recently received his annual present of ten pounds of candles. The man thus favored is the police commissary of the district of Saint Germain l'Auxerrois and he receives his box of candles from the chamber of notaries.

The origin of this observance dates a long way back. It arose out of a dispute between the police commissary of the Chatellet and the corporation of notaries.

The day of the former was to hold a lighted candle at the door of the chamber as the legal gentlemen were entering it, and on one occasion the commissary, with the apirit which animates many men in office, even in our own great country, complained that it was unfair for the expense of the candles to fall upon him, contending that he ought rather to receive an indemnity for his services.

He gained his point, and from that time forward the commissary was given three hundred pounds of wax candles annually. In the course of time the three hundred pounds of wax melted away and dwindled, till in the present day the ancient custom has come down to the gift of a ten-pound box of compound candles.

"THE COMMON PEOPLE."

As Abraham Lincoln called them, do not care to argue about their ailments. What they want is medicine that will cure them. The simple, honest statement, "I know that Hood's Sarsaparilla cured me," is the best argument in favor of this medicine, and this is what many thousands voluntarily say.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, assist digestion, cure head-ache, etc.

There will be no fall pastures.

In olden days gourmet meant a judge of wine and gourmand of eating. To-day the former is an epicure, both, and delicate in taste; the latter is a glutton in both and vulgar in taste. The days of famous eating are over. We Americans are a race of dyspeptics, and the most valuable thing which the average American can own to-day is a box of Ramon's Tonic Liver Pills, the great remedy for biliousness. 25 cents a box at all drug stores trial dose free.

It gets dark early these evenings.

AN OLD MAN'S COUNSEL.

Mr. Monroe Davidson, of Greenville, Ga., says, May 21st, 1895: "I have used Royall's Kidney Pills for kidney trouble from which I have suffered for many years. I gave me relief in a few days, and it is the only medicine that has ever given me permanent relief. I take pleasure in recommending them to any one suffering from any kind of kidney trouble. I believe it is the best thing that old people can use for debility and nervousness." New York, N. Y., U. S. Post Office, S. I. For sale by R. C. Hardwick.

Vultures and a Dead Tiger.

The vulture is seen at its best when a dead tiger, brought into camp to be skinned, is exposed in the open. Overhead in a cloud of sky, and not a bird is to be seen in that great vivid by the human eye. The tiger's body is thrown from the pad to the hall, and before the skin has been removed there, above are the vultures, circling, poising like things of air, now a dozen of them, in a few minutes a score or two, and then one hundred strong.

Then, when the flayed carcass of the tiger is left by those who skinned it, the vultures descend. Down they come, like feathered thunder, out of the sky, and from east and west and north and south. They embody power while they whirl about and in their quick descent, and now, as they waddle around that carcass, black, misshapen ghouls, whose only apparent strength is that of the ravening fangs, which tear and gorge the tiger's flesh until within the hour naught but a clean-picked skeleton.
